

National Park's Mona Murray, RTR, Voted Outstanding Radiology Tech by Students

Mona Murray, RTR, has been recognized as the Outstanding Radiology Technologist by the National Park Community College's two-year Radiology Tech students.

Murray has worked as an Interventional Radiology Technologist at National Park Medical Center since August of 2007, having begun her career as an x-ray tech in 1986. The thirteen NPCC graduates chose Murray as the one "Rad Tech" who taught them the most and went above and beyond during their clinical rotations which included a number of area hospital, clinics and physician practices.

"I'm absolutely honored and humbled by the recognition," said Murray. "Working with the students is a highlight of my position and I'm so glad that I could enhance their experience at such a level."
